Shauni receiving her award

Operational London Underground Apprentice wins London Apprentice of the Year

Congratulations to Shauni O'Neill, Operational Apprentice, who has won the London Apprentice of the Year Award at the regional rounds of the National Apprenticeship Awards.

The ceremony, held at City Hall on Monday night, was organised by the National Apprenticeship Service (NAS). The awards are designed to celebrate the achievements of apprentices and the businesses that employ them.

Shauni will now represent London in the National Apprenticeship Awards on the 29 June. She will be up against eight other regional winners having beaten over 550 entrants nationally to get to this stage.

The judges felt she exceeded all expectations with her high level of job awareness and effort. She was regarded as an exceptional apprentice and a real role model for others.

Howard Collins, Chief Operating Officer said: "Well done to Shauni who is, I know, already lining herself up for my job in the future."

Tube Lines were also named as runner up in the large employer category, again supported by the Work-based Learning team at Four Counties Training.
